It is the starting-point of every choice and of every aversion, and to it we come back, inasmuch as we make feeling the rule by which to judge of every good thing. And since pleasure is our first and native good, for that reason we do not choose every pleasure whatever, but often pass over many pleasures when a greater annoyance ensues from them.

Aristotle frequently emphasizes the importance of pleasure to human life and therefore to his study of how we should live (see for example 1099a7-20 and 1104b3-1105a16), but his full-scale examination of the nature and value of pleasure is found in two places: VII.11-14 and X.1-5.

Aristotle's Ethics (Stanford Encyclopedia of Philosophy)

According to the good pleasure of his will. The spring or motive to the selection is solely in God, not in man. It is an act of sovereignty. It has been disputed whether "the good pleasure of his will" is equivalent to benevolentia or to bene placitum. Parallel passages like Matthew 11:26 and Luke 10:21 lead us to prefer the latter.

D. Make choices which value God's eternal promises over immediate pleasure. Lot's choice of Sodom was based on what would bring him quick gratification, but he didn't take into account God's promise to Abram about the land. After Lot moved to Sodom, the Lord reaffirmed His promise to Abram and even expanded on it (13:14-17). F. B.
